Tobacco Sales to Minors Continue to Decline; Reach Record Low in FY08

The Synar Amendment requires states to have laws prohibiting the sale of tobacco products to those younger than 18 and to conduct annual random, unannounced inspections of a valid sample of tobacco retailers to ensure compliance with these laws. The average national retailer violation rate* from these inspections has decreased steadily, from 40% in FY97 (when regulations from the Synar Amendment were implemented by SAMHSA) to a new low of 10% in FY08 (see figure below). In FY08, violation rates ranged from 4% (Montana) to 17% (Ohio). The report notes that States with low violation rates are most likely to have a comprehensive, well-coordinated, and diverse tobacco access control program and that SAMHSA will continue to provide technical assistance to the States, “with the goal of eliminating the availability of tobacco products to minors, and so spare future generations the long-term disease and death attributable to tobacco use” (p. 15).

*The average national retailer violation rate was calculated by weighting each State’s reported retailer violation rate by that State’s population.

NOTE: Tobacco retailer inspection years are in federal fiscal years, which run from 10/1 to 9/30.
